• <h2>The Ellora Caves</h2>
• The Ellora Caves are a UNESCO World Heritage Site in Aurangabad district, Maharashtra, India (now renamed to Chhatrapati Sambhaji Nagar district). It is one of the largest rock-cut Hindu temple cave complexes in the world, with artwork dating from the period 600–1000 CE, also including several Buddhist and Jain
"caves".[1][2] The complex is a leading example of Indian rock-cut architecture, and several are not strictly "caves" in that they have no roof. Cave 16 features the largest single monolithic rock excavation in the world, the Kailash temple, a chariot-shaped monument dedicated to the god Shiva. The Kailash temple excavation also features sculptures depicting various Hindu deities as well as relief panels summarizing the two major Hindu epics.

A Brief History
• Was the original name of Ellora village, Elloda ? Because in one of the novels of S. L. Bhairappa it is mentioned as

Elloda. Given that British changed the spelling and prononciations of many places such as Dharwad/Dharwar etc. I guess it is Elloda.

Elloda...Ellora...these are both transliterations of the Marathi.

The soft d is not much different from a short-trilled r. English is stuck with the problem of getting close to non-English pronounciations, and no English transliteration will exact. It's Ellora on the Indian Railway; that's good enough for me.--Nemonoman 02:46, 18 October 2006 (UTC)[reply]

In Marathi it is Verul. Ellora is an English name. Also, I dont think there is a village named Ellora. Ellora has always been the archeological site. Also, generally, the monastic caves were away from the residential areas. --Kaveri 19:25, 5 August 2007 (UTC)

- Architectural Marvel`

- As you approach the temple, you're greeted by the majestic sight of intricate stone carvings and towering spires that reflect the artistry of ancient Indian architecture. The main shrine stands tall at 155 feet, beautifully overlooking the Arabian Sea. The vibrant colors of the surrounding gardens and the rhythmic sound of waves crashing against the shore create a serene atmosphere, making it a perfect spot for reflection and prayer.

- For many, visiting Ellora Caves is not just a journey to a historical site but a pilgrimage to one of the holiest places in Hinduism. The temple is believed to be a site where Lord Shiva himself resides, and the ambiance is filled with spirituality. Witnessing the morning aarti (prayer ceremony) is a profoundly moving experience, enveloping you in a sense of peace and devotion.
